Landing safely is the first step for three months of Mars exploration by each rover. Before rolling off its lander, each rover will spend a week or more unfolding itself, rising to full height, and scanning surroundings. Spirit and Opportunity each weigh about 17 times as much as the Sojourner rover of the 1997 Mars Pathfinder mission.

The lander and rover functioned far beyond their planned lifetimes (30 days for the lander and 7 days for the rover), but eventually, after about three months on the martian surface, depletion of the lander's battery and a drop in the lander's operating temperature are thought to have ended the mission.
